

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Richard A. Boswell is professor of law at the University of California, Hastings College of the Law, and director of the college's Immigrants Rights Clinic and Center on International Justice and Human Rights. He frequently lectures throughout the United States and abroad before groups of lawyers and others on a range of immigration topics. Professor Boswell is the author of numerous books and law review articles in the immigration field, most notable of which is his law school casebook, Immigration Law and Procedure: Cases and Materials (1999). He also is co-author of Refugee Law and Policy: Cases and Materials (1997). Most recently, Professor Boswell served as co-editor-in-chief of the Clinical Law Review and president of the Clinical Legal Education Association. He is a long-time member of AILA and has served on its board of governors. Professor Boswell has worked in a number of countries (the West Bank and Gaza, Latin America, and most recently, Haiti) consulting on the establishment of clinical programs and rule of law projects.
