Justice Department’s COPS Promotes Face2Face

January 15, 2011, Moss Beach, California.

COPS (Community Oriented Policy Services) is a newsletter of the US Department of Justice that promotes community policing and offers grants to various organizations. “Community policing is a philosophy that promotes organizational strategies, which support the systematic use of partnerships and problem-solving techniques, to proactively address the immediate conditions that give rise to public safety issues such as crime, social disorder, and fear of crime.”

Aside from the mental and social damage caused by methamphetamine abuse, the physical effects are well-documented and often devastating. Rotted teeth (“meth mouth”), open sores, and drastic weight loss are common among meth users and, in rural California, Sheriff Tom Allman sees these symptoms all too often. At the Mendocino County Jail, a substantial portion of the inmates are locked up because of meth-related crimes: possession, distribution, burglary, domestic violence, and theft. The sheriff and his deputies are daily witnesses to the damage caused by Mendocino citizens coming into contact with the toxic but common chemicals associated with meth production—cough medication, hydrochloric acid, iodine, and even brake fluid and drain cleaner.

Because of the drug’s highly addictive nature,

In its December 2010 issue COPS carries an article by Zoe Mentel, Policy Analyst with The COPS Office titled “Looking Meth in the Face”. The articles carries an interview with Sheriff Allman and describes the Face2Face system in great detail.
