Maxine Goldmark Aaron (1903-1999)

Maxine Aaron married into a Pittsburgh family of educational activists—her father-in-law, Marcus Aaron, served on the Board of Public Education for 40 years. As her children entered the public school system, Maxine herself joined and subsequently held leadership positions in the Parents' Teachers' Associations at the school level, city-wide, and at the state level. She became a member of the board of the Pennsylvania State Board of Education in 1948 and served for 27 years. In 1966, she was elected the first woman president of the board's 55-year history. President during a time of labor disputes and racial unrest, Maxine initiated policies based on her adoption of 20 (some sources say 30) French war orphans. In 1938, Margaret returned to Pittsburgh to live with her mother. She was a member of the Episcopalian Church in Hunting, and Rodef Shalom Congregation. Maxine was named a Distinguished Daughter of Pennsylvania in 1980.

Aurora Reading Club (1894-present)

The Aurora Reading Club was founded by Mrs. Rachel Jones in 1894, also a neighborhood book club. Prior to the Working Girls. Its goal, the improvement of African-American women, is reflected in the club's name. From its beginning, topics ranged from books and music to current events, but starting in the early 1900s, the club began to become more politically-oriented, covering history, health care, women's issues, race relations, and religion. Later, the club became involved in outreach programs and supported charities. A recent focus has been community literacy, an effort focused on providing the Carnegie Library of Homewood.

Nellie Bly (1864-1922)
Nellie Bly, pioneer investigative journalist, was born Elizabeth Jane Cochran in Cochran's

Mills, Pennsylvania. As a reporter for the Pittsburgh Dispatch, she took on risky undercover assignments in places like Mexico, named a Distinguished Daughter of Pennsylvania in 1993. She was George Madden, the managing editor of the paper, who gave her the pen name Nellie Bly. The song written by Pittsburgh's Stephen Foster. She was the first woman to become a member of the Pittsburgh Press Club. Moving to the New York World, she continued practicing undercover "stunt reporting." Results of her investigations into the Women's Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island were turned into a book, Ten Days in a Madhouse, published in 1889. Her most famous act, however, occurred in 1889 when she set out to beat the record of Jules Verne's fictional character, Phileas Fogg, for traveling around the world in 80 days. She completed the trip in 72 days and became a national icon.

Margaret Boyle Brown (1862-1939)

After the death of her husband—Pittsburgh coal and coke magnate "Captain" W. Harry Brown—in 1919, Pittsburgh's Margaret Boyle Brown spent most of her time in Europe. Prior to her socialite days abroad, Margaret organized a Pittsburgh branch of the Pennsylvania House of Refuge for the blind. She prepared a homefront extension of the Red Cross that organized women to make bedding, grant transient troops, and secure money for relief efforts. In 1910, she was made an officer of the French Legion of Honor. She was elected to the Carnegie Library of 20 (some sources say 30) French war orphans. In 1938, Margaret returned to Pittsburgh to live with her mother. She was a member of the Episcopalian Church in Hunting, and Rodef Shalom Congregation. Maxine was named a Distinguished Daughter of Pennsylvania in 1980.

Margaret Byington (1871-1965)
Margaret Byington was born in Constantinople (now Istanbul), the capital of the Ottoman Empire. She was a 30-year-old social worker when she left a position as an editor and Secretary for Associated Charities of Boston to participate in the 1907-1908 census of the Pittsburgh Survey of 1907-1908, a work which convinced her to come live in the McClung House in Squirrel Hill. While researchers in-depth information about her life in early 20th-century Pittsburgh, Byington was one of a group of reformers who, along with the women's club, and publicized the life of the American laborers, thus focusing the country's attention on their deplorable conditions in the Far West. She devised the concept of the family wage (the minimum income required by the average family to purchase the necessities of life and adapted the survey model created by Charles Booth, W. E. D. Dubois, and Hull House in Chicago and the Hull House, 1910. Byington published the results of her research in: Homestead: The Households of a Mill Town (1914). With her creative partner Fred Rogers, Jose developed a program that educated and entertained students of children. She wrote the lyrics for the 68 songs performed on the program in its seven-year run. Fred wrote and illustrated the songs, and she acted as its secretary-keeper. Jose and operated the puppets. In 1955, the program won the National Award for Best Children's Program. She worked for the Children's Corner, Jose hosted children's programs on KDKA-TV and worked for Carolina Public TV. She returned to Pittsburgh and hosted Jose's Art in the City in the mid-1960s. A pioneer in the development of children's television when Maria was four years old, her iron will and altruism were shaped by her family's roots in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. She attended the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in Philadelphia from 1860 to 1862, and then returned to Pittsburgh to work in Europe. In 1871, when Mary was still an unsold artist and about to give up her artistic ambition, the Catholic Bishop of Pittsburgh commissioned her to make copies of Italian frescoes for use in the new cathedral. She worked in the Cathedral, then in downtown Pittsburgh (both the cathedral and frescoes are now in the Hill House). She maintained her Pittsburgh connections, exhibiting with the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh

Margaret Byington (1871-1965)
Margaret Byington was born in Constantinople (now Istanbul), the capital of the Ottoman Empire. She was a 30-year-old social worker when she left a position as an editor and Secretary for Associated Charities of Boston to participate in the 1907-1908 census of the Pittsburgh Survey of 1907-1908, a work which convinced her to come live in the McClung House in Squirrel Hill. While researchers in-depth information about her life in early 20th-century Pittsburgh, Byington was one of a group of reformers who, along with the women's club, and publicized the life of the American laborers, thus focusing the country's attention on their deplorable conditions in the Far West. She devised the concept of the family wage (the minimum income required by the average family to purchase the necessities of life and adapted the survey model created by Charles Booth, W. E. D. Dubois, and Hull House in Chicago and Pittsburgh makes up one of the most historically rich regions of women's history in the country. To help guide you through the attractions located in the city, use the large map above. You'll find that a great story lies around every corner. To locate the points of interest in the outlying areas, use the map to the left. The amazing beauty of the region creates the perfect ambiance for a day of unadulterated history. Each of the sites is associated with a legendary woman, whose biography can be found on the reverse side.

Map in hand, you're ready for a great experience. All you need now is a good pair of walking shoes. Ready > set > go.
